SEOUL — A Vietnamese prisoner was executed by firing squad in North Korea on Tuesday, the first known prisoner to be executed this year, according to the North's state-run news agency. The reporter for the state-run Korean Central News Agency said the prisoner was found guilty of treason, a highly sensitive criminal charge often used to target perceived opponents or opponents of the government. The report does not say when in the year the prisoner was executed. The United States State Department did not immediately respond to a request for comment. The news agency did not provide further details on the prisoner. A number of Vietnamese citizens were arrested and imprisoned in the past two years in connection with North Korea's abduction of its citizens in the 1970s and 1980s. Human Rights Watch said that this year, a69d392a70
