Tuberculosis: An extended knowledge base for comparative genomics and drug discovery Disclaimer: "The Genome Analysis of Tuberculosis Project (TBGEN), that supported this study, is a multi-institutional effort to characterize the genetic diversity of Mycobacterium tuberculosis (M.tb.) by using a combination of technologies including next generation sequencing, multilocus sequence typing (MLST), whole genome sequencing (WGS) and bioinformatic analysis. The TBGEN study, however, was not designed to investigate the relationship between phenotypic drug-resistance and genotypic drug-resistance. We therefore do not intend to make any implication about the relationship between phenotypic drug-resistance and genotypic drug-resistance." – from the Genome Analysis of Tuberculosis Project page. 1. The study used 17.2-Mb of publicly available genome sequences, and 16 kb of cell-free DNA purified from blood. (The smallest pieces of DNA with a stable nucleotide composition that have been successfully sequenced.) 2. The database contained 17,178,629 bp of nucleotide sequences, of which 12.5% were marked as characterized by the software. 3. Within the patient 570a42141b
