In addition to the two mentioned above, several other photo editing programs are available. We introduce them in the upcoming sections of this chapter, but keep in mind that Photoshop is the standard for most people in today's image editing. You can download trial versions from the website for each of the programs covered in this chapter. Download the trial version to your hard drive and play around with it for a few days to see what the program does. The basic layers, layers groupings, panels, palettes, and toolbars make Photoshop so highly productive. You can use all the features in a snap, and with all the help that comes with the program, you'll never have to ask the question, "Where is this tool?" With so many layers, groups, and options available, you can perform almost any task that you desire, but in this section, we explain the major functions that make up the Photoshop editing suite. To keep the explanations brief, we focus primarily on the most common uses of Photoshop. Creating images from scratch using Photoshop After you create a new document, you start by creating a new image in the program by using the File⇒New command. Choose File⇒New. You then choose from the available options on the right side of the interface, as

Q: Can't reference dropdownList values in a property with a variable string name I'm trying to store the values selected in a dropdownList into a property with a variable string name using reflection. I've tried the following: private class MyProperty : DependencyProperty { public String MyProperty { get { return (String)GetValue(MyProperty); } set { SetValue(MyProperty, value); } } public override String GetMetadataName() { return "My Property"; } } ... MyProperty pp = this.FindName("MyProperty") as MyProperty; string selection = string.Format("{0}", this.ddSelected.Selected.Value); string value = string.Format("{0}", pp.MyProperty); Both of the following throws a null reference exception (which makes sense since the value that I'm trying to set is null); string value = string.Format("{0}", pp.MyProperty); string value = string.Format("{0}", pp.[0]MyProperty); My question is: 1) Is there a better way to store the value selected into the property in my variable string name than my current method? 2) If not, how should I be referencing the dropdownlist item's selected value to store into the property? Thanks in advance. A: To assign values to another property, or any property for that matter, you need to reference the property by name. To get the name of the property, you can use the following code snippet: Type type = this.GetType(); PropertyInfo[] properties = type.GetProperties(); foreach (PropertyInfo property in properties) { ... string metadataName = property.GetMetadata("My Property"); ... } As for the String.Format call, you are using the {0} placeholder, which is used to insert the value of the argument to a string. In your case, however, there's no argument, so the value that you want to insert is simply null. To get around this, you need to first get the value of the dropdown, and then use the String.Format call in a
