Snyder's Batman v Superman looks like it's going to be an over-the-top spectacle of armoured superheroes and superheroes with jetpacks slamming into each other with various inappropriate gestures. But back in 2012, when Batman v Superman was The Avengers with Gotham animals and a Batman with no Shazam, the critics were pretty critical of The Avengers and the critics were right. It was silly, eye-bleeding, one-dimensional, a waste of time and money. But now they're wrong. It's the movie that's wrong. It's a great movie that's there to sell us $70 million of merchandise and $325 million in tickets. It's the perfect summation of what DC movies have tried to do and what the character can do when he's not stuck inside some gimmicky box. The critics were never going to give Batman v Superman much of a chance, given the fact it has a cape, an otherworldly story about two superheroes squaring off against each other and a director who's more at home with overly complicated films like Watchmen and 300. But the critics missed out on something brilliant. The first time people saw Batman v Superman they assumed it was going to be like Batman Begins, as that was what they expected, and it was a big mistake. Batman Begins was a really good movie that mixed its superheroes with a rather serious story about a former man with the Batman title who battles the psychological effects of losing his friend – and wife – in a bombing that took his young daughter's life. Batman v Superman has a similarly serious tone. Lex Luthor is a villain with a heart of gold, Superman is an alien with lots of emotions, Zack Snyder is taking a darker turn and, oh, that cute yellow-spandex Batman has some serious psychological issues to resolve in his psyche. And
