The Transnet Department of Transport's safety unit bought a virtual reality headset and was able to test a program that was able to block drivers from using their phones while driving. The program can detect when a driver is doing an activity that falls under the South African Telecommunications Act by analyzing their eye movements. The headset has several cameras that record the movement of the driver's eye. According to Fast Company, the program identifies a driver's attention when scanning the road for signs that are potentially hazardous and will then block the driver's line of sight. While some drivers might see this as inconvenient, Transnet says it expects the program to increase productivity.Masterwork Returns The Best Year of my Life It's easy to forget that the Upper City is a small community — you never notice most of the businesses unless you live there or go through a particular neighborhood. Two weeks after Christmas, the French Quarter Festival comes and goes and we can once again smell Bourbon Street. I can't think of any other time when I feel so fortunate and so lucky. The Festival is not the biggest in the country, but what I love is that it's a local affair and that it takes place just blocks from where I live. It's fun to see people in the French Quarter dressed up for the Festival. I love seeing French Quarter residents. Here are a few of the highlights of the Festival: Hood River Restaurant Week The Hood River National Forest is beautiful. I'm inspired by the Rockies, but there's something about the lushness of the forest that makes me want to stay longer than an hour or two. This year, in partnership with Hood River restaurants, there was a special $5 menu at restaurants in the French Quarter that included small plates for just $5. It's a great idea — I'm so glad I participated. What an inspiration e79caf774b
