Field of the Invention This invention relates to an air-fuel ratio control system for an internal combustion engine, more particularly to an air-fuel ratio control system including an air-fuel ratio sensor capable of outputting two different sensor outputs at two different air-fuel ratios. 2. Description of the Related Art An air-fuel ratio control system for an internal combustion engine is known from, for example, Japanese Patent Publication (kokoku) No. 49-33733. According to this air-fuel ratio control system, the air-fuel ratio of an air-fuel mixture supplied to an engine is controlled on the basis of the output of an air-fuel ratio sensor (also called an oxygen sensor) disposed in an exhaust system of the engine. In an internal combustion engine, combustion occurs typically while air-fuel ratio is being increased in the order of a lean atmosphere, a rich atmosphere, a lean atmosphere, and a rich atmosphere. When the air-fuel ratio sensor is disposed at, for example, an upstream side of a catalytic converter, therefore, sensor output variations accompany the air-fuel ratio variations. Specifically, sensor output rapidly increases with leanening of the air-fuel ratio and rapidly decreases with the increasing of the air-fuel ratio. In other words, the sensor output is a temperature-dependent characteristic, which is represented by a temperature coefficient or a
