Dr.dolittle 2 tamil dubbed full movie downloadkQ: How to update a specific row in a MySQL table from another MySQL table with PHP I have two MySQL tables. One table has a list of users and the other has a list of properties owned by each user. So there is a link from each user to their own properties. I want to be able to have a page which displays each user's list of properties on the front end. But to update them (if applicable) on the back end. I know that PHP can manipulate the database from the page. So I am thinking that the output of the link in a select box. I can then post that to update the selected row with the new properties. Is this a sensible approach? Or will it get me into trouble? Thanks A: Yes, this is a sensible approach. It's not a hard approach, but it will work. You will need to ensure that you have the proper privileges on the tables, and use prepared statements to ensure that your query is properly escaped against SQL injection. E.g.: // Connect to the database using the regular (MYSQL) query string. $db = new PDO('mysql:dbname=testdb;host=127.0.0.1', 'user', 'pass'); // Est
