With this release, we added a 'Server' dropdown menu in the 'Presence' and 'Invite' tab of the account settings. 9.03 Patch Notes The patch notes have been added to the complete release notes in the sidebar. Please note that some text is abbreviated as a result of this. FIX: This will fix an issue where locked guild members could walk through a door another guild member is casting a skill. FIX: Forced registration of skype as a work around to a bug on skype in previous major releases. FIX: Damage from Fire Shield has been changed to its correct damage output. Fire Shield was sometimes being used as a third hitting skill when it was a second hitting skill. FIX: Cyst generation items and Skill Gems has been removed. Items are still created but without their benefits.Q: .net DataGridView - Current row selected in Column and cell edit mode I got some help on another problem and I hope it is a 'tightly related' issue. So, I have a DataGridView which contains 3 columns (Heading, Time, Amount), being the first row selected at the beginning of the form. What I want to do is, after some basic data manipulations like editing Amount, row has to be selected at which that happened. For example: in case of clicking Amount line on top row, datagrid would need to display only that row being currently active or with initial focus (previously selected row). Unfortunately, I have no idea how to do this, without having to move to the whole row. Thank you! A: DataGridView.ItemSelectionChanged(...) is what to use to select the current row. Q: How to execute cmd-based command in a Tcl script I have a script in Tcl which uses a 'fancy-funtion'. The problem is when I run the tclsh script in the terminal, it gives "Could not find package XXXX". I suspect it might be the way I am calling the C command. I am not sure if the line is correct or I am passing it in wrong format. Any suggestions will be much appreciated.

A: If you're doing this interactively, you want to use the escape-sequence `\` to tell Tcl that this is the start of a single-quoted string. Otherwise, it's using the normal single-quoted string syntax. (The single-quoted string syntax is used for things like `eval()`, too, so you also need `\` in there.)

```
This is a normal Tcl-ish, single-quoted string: puts "This is my DB: $DB" # This is a single-quoted string: puts "This is my DB: $DB" # This is a double-quoted string, with a backslash before the ": puts "This is my DB: $DB" # This is a double-quoted string, with a backslash before the first ": puts "This is my DB: \$DB"

If you want to run `.\cifs-table-query...` directly, then you need to use
