* _Photoshop Elements:_ A version of Photoshop designed for beginners, Photoshop Elements includes most of the features and tools found in the full-featured version of Photoshop but works on much smaller files. Elements also has some features that are not available in the full version, such as its ability to work with scans, transparencies, and GIFs (as opposed to JPG files). *

_The Adobe Creative Suite:_ This version of Photoshop is designed for the professional with features that are not found in Photoshop Elements. Photoshop is packaged with Adobe's InDesign and Dreamweaver web design tools and is also sold separately with programs such as Adobe Illustrator and Flash Professional. If you have the Photoshop package with the Creative Suite, you have access to the hundreds of other tools that are included with the suite. When it comes to professional-level software, a few things can make or break your workflow. For example, not having all the necessary assets in the program's collection can create problems. These problems include a less-than-impressive selection tool, an underwhelming or nonexistent layer manager, and a collection with no materials ready to use. The same goes for the program's lack of search engine for retouching and its inability to retouch photos in batch. *

_The Adobe Creative Suite:_ As with the Photoshop package, this version of Photoshop is ready to use right out of the box. It includes every tool and feature that you can use to work with graphics. Instead of being able to put together what you need yourself, this version gives you everything you need to get started, including items like preinstalled Adobe After Effects and Adobe InDesign.

Topography Topography is the branch of modern geography that deals with the study of the shape and surface of the Earth and the other planets. You can make interesting stuff with Topography. In the following examples, I've made a Topography mesh, adjusted the terrain values to create a digital elevation model (DEM) and made an overview map. The Topography mesh I was surprised to find the Topography plugin in Photoshop. It's a lot easier than I'd expected to work with than ArcGIS or something similar. There are two main functions in this plugin: the "Make" function and the "Make into Topo" function. Topo | Make You first have to create a new mesh before you can use it for the second step. Create a new mesh A very good tip is to create a new mesh in "copy" mode. Otherwise you have to work a lot with edges. The New Mesh tool These two functions convert the mesh you created into a Topo file. The "Make into Topo" function The "Make" function Use the "Make into Topo" function, which is the easier tool. The functionality is not really complex. The Function dialog of the "Make into Topo" function Topographic reference image: Flickr user yib2y To create the topographic reference image, I first created a Topo template, which contains a planar projection into which the terrain was mapped. Then I selected the entire area from the top and copied it. Afterwards, I selected the area and used the "Make into Topo" function to create a topographic reference. Use the "Make" function and select the terrain that you want to create a DEM for. Topography | Make into Topo Select the area Use the coordinates of the polygon that you want to create a DEM for. Press Enter in the "Make into Topo" dialog. The "Make into Topo" dialog (1:1 scale) Topographic reference image: Flickr user yib2y Topo | Make into Topo Into the planar projection The terrain is now mapped to an orthogonal projection. 05a79cecff

Pages Monday, May 8, 2014 A dear friend of mine has a friend who is recovering from open-heart surgery. I don't know what he was like before the surgery, but now he is so happy. His surgery wasn't as long as mine was, but when he got out of surgery he was leaving the hospital and hanging on to the ICU door. He wouldn't let go. He is the kind of person who shines bright. He is always happy, kind, caring. He loves people and other animals, and tries to live life as if it is truly precious. He is the kind of person who loves baking, and being in his kitchen has always been one of my favorite places. All of this, and more, is why I am so upset to learn that he is no longer with us. He was diagnosed with lung cancer during his heart surgery, and now we have lost him to it. He didn't tell anyone, I mean not even his sister or his close friends, he was waiting for the doctors to confirm the diagnosis, and he told us later. He was in such good spirits when he told us, and he was such a kind, gentle person that he was diagnosed. We should have known he was ill from the beginning, because he had been dealing with kidney stones for the past few months. He hadn't gone to the doctor for any of this, he had been living a fairly healthy lifestyle, but he was in pain and it was getting worse. His sister's reaction was to tell him to go to a doctor. He has good reason to listen to her. Lung cancer is one of the worst forms to have, and it is very hard to beat, but he did beat it. We should have known it sooner, but then, we probably wouldn't have seen so much of his wonderful smile. I pray that he is in the best place he can be now, and that he is happy. He was the kindest, most giving, and caring person I have ever known, and we can be sad that we will never get to know him better. I want to honor him by living my life the way he did, with kindness and a smile, and I want to live for him. I know he is in a better place now, but he was my heart, and I'm glad to know he is there. It's been almost a year since I wrote my last post. I
