Turkish soldiers have raided a Kurdish village and detained 20 people after Kurdish-led forces in northern Syria accused a military group of having executed 11 Kurds in the surrounding area. Security sources said Turkish troops entered the village of Yazidi on Thursday to check on the inhabitants, and then detained 18 people, most of them women and children. The military operation began when five women were reported missing in the village. The Turkish operation comes days after the death of a top Syrian Kurdish commander in an ambush in northern Syria. Turkey is concerned that Kurdish forces could use the 10th anniversary of the collapse of a 15-year ceasefire between Turkey and Syria to advance an autonomous area in north Syria. The YPG, which controls the area around the border town of Tel Abyad and is considered a terror group by Turkey, says it is fighting IS. The YPG is affiliated with Turkey's Kurdistan Workers Party (PKK), which has waged a long insurgency in Turkey that has killed 40,000 people, most of them civilians. "After Turkey came to the village, there were 10 families. Four of them have been released today," said a YPG official. "Some have agreed to go back but others refused. One of them is injured and we are looking for a solution to his release," the official added. Turkey considers the YPG to be a front for the PKK. The YPG denies the accusations of the IS attack on Tal Abyad and said it will not negotiate with Turkey on its attempts to join the control of northern Syria. "We have not had contact with Turkey in a long time. We will not negotiate with Turkey in the current circumstances," said the official. In the nearby town of Kobane, the last major urban centre of the Syrian Kurdish YPG, the organization denounced its Turkish counterparts and denied any involvement in the attack. The YPG's statement came a day after Mustafa Darwish, a top leader, was killed by a roadside bomb in the town of Qamishli, north of Tal Abyad. The YPG official said that "such acts do not represent the YPG. The YPG will continue to confront violence and terrorism in line with its resistance programme." The YPG, which controls swathes of northern Syria, has warned Turkey that it will not negotiate the withdrawal of its forces from northern Syria and has threatened to push its fighters into Turkey. On Thursday, Deputy Prime Minister Numan Kurtulmus
