Q: dynamic query with php and mysql I'm new to php and mysql and I need some help with mysql. I'm working on a website where users upload photos and the photos are displayed on the website, very simple. I'm trying to make the backend as dynamic as possible, so users can have their own function to tag photos. I came up with the idea to implement an update function, that searches for the photo ID from the database and updates the array according to the user's changes. The problem is that I don't want to show the array, I just want it to update. Let's say that I have the following array of photo IDs ($ids) in the database: 1,2,5,3,3,4 Now, I want to make a new array ($newids) but with the IDs that the user has not tagged yet. So the $newids should be: 1,5,3,3 I tried something like this: $query = mysql_query("SELECT DISTINCT `photoId` from tableName"); while($row = mysql_fetch_assoc($query)) { $newids[] = $row['photoId']; } But I get an error message, so I don't know how to update the query. I tried something like this but that doesn't work: SELECT * FROM tableName WHERE id IN ("1,2,5,3,3,4"); EDIT: This code outputs the $ids array in the html instead of updating the array. A: You need to build the query dynamically, that you can either do by running SELECT * FROM tableName WHERE id IN ('1', '2', '5', '3', '3', '4'); or by imploding them: $newids = array(); while($row = mysql_fetch_assoc($query)){ $newids[] = $row['photoId']; } $sql = "SELECT * FROM tableName WHERE id IN ('". implode("',' ", $newids). "')"; Microsoft releases Windows 10 for IoT – wireless and Surface - doener

Q: Serialization of Laravel's JSON response Is there a correct way to serialize Laravel's JSON response? The problem with outputting standard JSON responses as in this blog post is that JSON responses also have a HTML-escaped response header. In my opinion, the best way of serializing a response is to generate a JSON response with a wrapper value of the JSON response. Something like this: $serializer = new JsonSerializer; $array = [ 'status' => 'ok', 'data' => [ 'success' => true, 'foo' => 1, 'bar' => 'asdf' ] ]; $response = $serializer->toJson($array); I'm not sure, however, if there are any implications of doing this. I'm a bit worried it makes it harder to write unit tests because you have to manually create test data arrays. A: If you want to get rid of the unwanted headers, you can implement JsonSerializable and just serialize your response in a way that does not include the extra headers. class MyResponse implements JsonSerializable { public function jsonSerialize() { return $this->getArrayOfData()->toArray(); } } // Somewhere in your controller or service $request = (new App\Http\Request('GET', '/path', [ 'foo' => 'bar', 'foo' => 'bar', ])) ->setJsonBody(new MyResponse()); //... $response = json_decode($response, true); This way you can directly serialize the data array. A: For anyone using a recent laravel-5.3: Add this to your global service providers array in the providers array: Desert\Entities\EntitiesServiceProvider::class, then add this to the update() method: public function update(Request $request, $id) { $result = (new Desert\Entities\Entity()->update($request,
