BRRiP 1080p BluRay Dual Audio EN NL.Q: How to compare strings with comma as a separator in bash I have a file with hundreds of different strings. When someone reads the file, he gets a string one-by-one, and then enters a response. If he enters the wrong response, he is asked to insert the correct string. I do so using a loop, comparing the new string to the former strings in the file (with the said separator). The separator is a comma. The strings are entered like: "red, orange, yellow, green, blue, white, indigo, black", etc. The file looks like this: green, blue, white end enter correct response red, orange, yellow, green, blue, white, indigo, black red, orange, yellow, green, blue, white, indigo, black red, orange, yellow, green, blue, white, indigo, black red, orange, yellow, green, blue, white, indigo, black What I need is a script that can detect if the correct string is in the file, and what is the string in the file that matches it. I tried this: while read -r line do echo $line if ["$line" =~ $correct_string] then echo "right string." else echo "wrong string" fi done
