Our Supreme Court, however, held that by virtue of section 13-18-13, the State has the right to appeal from an order granting a motion to quash an arrest and search warrant where the State seeks to introduce the fruits of the unlawful arrest and search. Galesburg v. State, 598 P.2d 386 (Alaska 1979). The court determined that the State is not required to pursue the more specific remedy of a motion in arrest of judgment where a defendant is seeking to challenge the trial court's conclusion that the defective warrant was in fact valid. Galesburg, 598 P.2d at 390-91. In the case at bar, Alaska Statute 09.35.120 provides that the State may appeal from a pre-trial ruling suppressing evidence: (b) that the court may otherwise have power to suppress under the provisions of sections 12.15.010 or 15.11.010 of the Alaska Statutes. AS 09.35.120(b). Both appellant and the State contend that the trial court's order suppressing evidence in this case was a ruling granting a motion to suppress and that under Galesburg the State may appeal from such a ruling in the instant case. The State argues that if the court's ruling was a suppression order, it would have been appealable under Galesburg. Appellant contends that the court's ruling does not fall within the purview of section 12.15.010 of the Alaska Statutes or section 15.11.010 of the Alaska Statutes, both of which sections appear to require that the court's ruling result in the suppression of the evidence. He argues that Galesburg does not control the instant case because this *1335 is a situation where the defendant is moving to quash the complaint, not to suppress evidence, and is therefore not precluded by Galesburg. We find no support for appellant's contention that the court's ruling cannot be considered a ruling to suppress evidence and that it therefore cannot be appealable under Galesburg. Although the ruling did not amount to suppression of the evidence, it did amount to a ruling suppressing the evidence that was the subject of the charges pending in the district court. In light of Galesburg, we hold that an order granting
