Say I have an object with roughly 1000 properties. I know this is probably a flawed example, but it should give you a general idea. public class Foo { private int foo1; private boolean foo2; private Foo[] foo3; private Object[] foo4; private Boolean[] foo5; private Boolean foo6; private Foo foo7; //.. etc. } In my application, it's often necessary to serialize and deserialize this object from a flat JSON string. The JSON string, in turn, is usually much smaller than the object itself. Since Jackson requires that all properties of a class must be
