NOw theres something that ill show you in this video, and by the way no bots were used. There are several tutorial videos on youtube, but in this one i will show y. There's a thread on a disk defrag guide and something about flashing the bios and starting from scratch. I dont know if that is true, but you might be able to find some reference threads on the internet. Did you check www.tesco.com for 'disk defrag guide' or similar? I think it is a basic question on how a HDD works, but if you are totally new to HDD and Partitioning try to be more specific :) DISCLAIMER: if you download something from youtube and see that it was made by me, i do have a flickr account with my work, so if you are trying to steal from me just link directly to the upload on flickr. Under ideal circumstances, physicians should be able to contact and check with the patient about any problem, when encountering an unexpected new problem. I have a friend, who has a mother who is normally happy with her quality of life, but she is in an advanced stage of Alzheimer's disease. It's been two years since she has been diagnosed with the disease, and she is in a very bad stage. She speaks very little and she cannot read her own handwriting. I try to help her with tasks like changing the TV channel, or making tea. Sometimes she calls me for help. (For example: the doctor is not in; this is the place where I can receive such a call.) I do the following: I try to look up on her file, to see what her diagnosis was, and which medicines she is on. It is clear that the diagnosis was Alzheimer's disease, but now, even when I look up the correct diagnosis, I cannot have a good idea about which medications she is on. I guess this is an issue: if the patient is in some crisis that has just begun, a good idea to do is to ask for the medical prescription. But in the case of my friend's mother, even if I look up the right diagnosis, there is no medical prescription. In such cases, I have to ask my friend to tell me everything. I do 6d1f23a050
