. ByNiels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (born 20 October 1963 in Frederikshavn, Denmark) is a Danish painter and sculptor, currently living in the Netherlands. Life and work Pedersen was a mailman for four years, and as an adolescent was in the lower grades of the class of a truck driver. The respect he gained from these two environments determined his painting, which in its early stages consisted of "quotes from late romanticism". At the age of 24, he lived in Denmark for ten years, where he painted mostly in the southern part of the country. During these years, he often traveled to Japan. In 1996, Pedersen moved to Amsterdam, where he now resides and has studied at the Amsterdam-based Academie voor Beeldende Kunsten (ABK) since 2000. He currently teaches at the ADK. The subject matter of his work is varied. He paints landscapes, but also portraits, figures of animals (like a lion) and characters. He first had exhibitions in 2000 and 2003, and since then his work has been exhibited in international galleries, including in Japan and Denmark. Works On the paintings, drawings, watercolours and sketches of An Egyptian Woman, a Mother and a Girl, the source is the book of the same title by the German writer Hermann Hesse. This work has been exhibited at the Triennale di Milano. His Dog Tag, which features a dog wearing a collar with a tag, was purchased by the Museo Correr in Venice. Other works of note are the head of a lion and a nude of a woman, which are in the collection of the Schirn Kunsthalle. Work in public collections Ackermans Museum
